REAGAN SAYS BLAST WON'T DETER U.S.

He Vows to Keep On Pressing for the Pullout of Foreign Forces From Lebanon

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 20 — President Reagan said today that as a result of the bombing of the American Embassy in Beirut he was determined "more than ever" to do everything possible to bring about the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

The White House issued Mr. Reagan's remarks, made in a telephone call to the United States Ambassador in Beirut, as it announced plans to send a delegation to Lebanon to bring back the American dead.

Mr. Reagan ordered the flying of all official flags at half-staff until Tuesday "as a mark of respect for the American diplomats, military personnel and loyal staff members who died violently" in the attack on Monday.

Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, said 10 American dead had been identified, and six other Americans were missing and presumed dead. Nine names had previously been made public. Today the State Department added a 10th, Terry Gildea, 26 years old, who had been on temporary duty at the embassy as a security officer.

'Everything That Is Necessary'

Mr. Reagan, in his telephone call to Ambassador Robert S. Dillon in Beirut, was reported by Mr. Speakes to have said:

"This tragedy, however awful, must not distract us from our search for peace in Lebanon and elsewhere. Your devotion to duty is known to all of us. Please let everyone know we will never give in to this cowardly type of incident. I am determined now more than ever that we do everything that is necessary to make Lebanon a free and safe country again."

Mr. Speakes said the No. 3 man at the State Department, Lawrence S. Eagleburger, the Under Secretary for Political Affairs, would head the nine-member delegation, which would include representatives from the State Department, the Agency for International Development, the Defense Department and the Central Intelligence Agency, all of which had colleagues killed in the embassy explosion.

Meanwhile, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee followed the House Foreign Affairs Committee and voted to approve the entire $251 million in additional economic and military aid requested for Lebanon for this fiscal year.
